Arafat Opposition In PLO Sharpens

His Mandate May Be Restricted At Meeting of Aides Next Week

By Jonathan C. Randal

DAMASCUS — His guns spaked by Israel's invasion of Lebanon Arab-world squabbling, the Palestine Liberation Organization chair-man, Yasser Arafat, is facing the fiercest opposition to date from within his own ranks.

With his leadership position up for renewal in a week at a meeting in Algiers of the Palestine National Council, the PLO's parliament in edile, Mr. Arafat has little to show for his efforts to angotiate with Jor-dan, to avoid outright rejection of President Ronald Reagan's peace plan and to renew ties with an Egypt still suspect because of its separate peace with Israel. The latest blow to his efforts to salvage some diplomatic gain from the ruins of the PLO's military defeat in Lebanon has been administered by the United States.

Just before Christmas, Washington had set into motion a series of delicately synchronized deadlines designed to persuade King Hussein: to bring Jordan into the peace ne-gotiations outlined by Mr. Reason.

Diplomatic sources stressed that the species of the whole process depended on American forcefulness bringing about the withdrawal of Israeli troops from Lebimon by mid-February. This would show a doubting Arab world that the Reagan administration meant to push ahead with the president's plan despite Israel's rejection.

With that in mind, King Hussein nounce by March I his decision about entering the peace talks. That stand was designed to put maximum pressure on Mr. Arafat to agree to a joint negotiating delo-gation and a confederation with Jordan instead of an independent Palestinian state on the West Bank. Mr. Arafat, in turn, according to pies with a difficult alternative; either to accept the king's offer, considered tantamount to scuttling the PLO's dreams, or to reject this "last chance" knowing that Israel was doubling the number of Jewish settlers on the West Bank

With the talks between Israel and Lebanon showing little move-ment, there seems little prospect of a withdrawal agreement before Feb. 14, when Mr. Arafat convenes the National Council.

Leading Mr. Arafat's detractors are the Syrians, who fear that any improvement of PLO fies with Jordan, Egypt and the United States would necessarily be bought at the cost of their own greater isolation. Weekly during the past month, Syrian ministers have attacked Mr.

Arafat, accusing him of violating the PLO's rates and regulations. His exities inside the PLO in-clude not only members of the three county, responses three overfly pro Syrian groups, but also the radical Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, led by George Habash, and Nayel Hawatmen's Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine.

Even a significant minority within Mr. Arafat's own el-Fatab, espe-cially the left wing led by Nimt Salch, and Mr. Arafat's second in command, Khalil Wazir, better known as Abu Jihad, have been outspoken in denouncing his moderation in dealing with Jordan, Egypt and the United States. But alestinian has dared to condemn Mr. Arafat by name.

So deep run the differences bewings that Shafik al-Hout, the t-ranking PLO official still in Lebanon, recently spoke of breaking the National Council's tradition of consensus and acknowledging an opposition minority.

"The real problem," a Palestinian official said, "is that there are few choices and they are all bleak." Predicting "volcanic eruptions" in the Middle Past and increasing moderate Acab governments, the stricker saided. The problem with the PLO becoming violent is that is exactly what the Israelis would like. They invaded Lebanon not because we were a military threat but because Arafat's diplomacy was beginning to pose a serious threat to them internationally."

Bush Stresses 'Morality' of U.S. Stand

By Michael Getler

Washington Past Service ROME - Vice President George Bush emphasized repeatedly Mon-day that the U.S. proposal for clim-inating all nuclear medium-range missiles from Enrope was "the strong moral position."

The vice president's repetition of a moral point in the debate, U.S. officials acknowledge privately, is in part an effort to counter criticism from church groups.

Although Mr. Bush has referred to a moral position in every speech and press-conference in five West European countries he has visited, he did so six times Monday during a 30-minute press conference. The references were made after his meeting with Italian-leaders and Pope John Paul II: Mr. Bush later. used the word moral in describing the pope's impact on global atti-

Trend Reflects Dissatisfaction With a Decade of Loosened Standards By Gene I. Macroff

New York Times Service NEW YORK - State universities across the United States are raising admission requirements and many are stiffening standards for high school diplomas to emphasize stronger preparation for college.

The trend, mainly affecting high school students headed for college reverses more than a decade of leosened standards. It is expected to make it harder for students withour proper academic background to get into some state universities, many of which are shifting away from open admissions policies.

The movement is a reaction to widespread public dissatisfaction with the general achievement levels of high school graduates. Many educators say the graduates are not ready for either college or jobs. Officials say the economy can no longer absorb those who are poorly trained and that money problems at state universities are forcing them to concentrate on those most likely to succeed.

The increased concern with academic preparation for college seems to mark the start of a new era. In the mid-1960s to early 1970s, when high school and col-lege students rehelled against everything from dress codes to curricnlum requirements, schools eased requirements and educators promoted open access to higher educa-

Those who meet the tougher standards should still be able to get into good schools since more of the smaller and less well-known, but expensive, private colleges are abandoning selectivity as they search desperately for students. And public, two-year communi-

Burger Asks Creation of A New Court Chief Justice in U.S. Criticizes Case Load

By Fred Barbash ington Post Service NEW ORLEANS — Chief Jus-ice Warren E. Burger has asked Congress to create a new national appeals court to relieve the U.S. Supreme Court of as many as onethird of its cases.

Although the proposed panel's jurisdiction would be limited, Justice Burger said Sunday, its deci-sions would be binding throughout the country unless they were overruled by the Supreme Court.

The creation of such a panel would represent the most fundamental alteration of the federal judicial system in nearly a century.

Justice Burger has long complained about the Supreme Court's work load. Just last month, he criticized Congress for not acting on 75 new federal judgeships requested in 1981 by the Judicini Conference, the governing body of the federal

In his annual State of the Judiciary address to the American Bar Association convention in New Orleans, Justice Burger said a dramatic court restructuring was neces-sary to "avoid a breakdown of the system - or of some of the jus-

In comments earlier, he used even stronger terms. "We see approaching a disaster area, not just a problem," he said. "We've got 90 to 100 cases filed every week. I have been surprised that we haven't had a breakdown of the system, to say nothing of a physical breakdown of some of the justices with the work load."

Sixty hours a week minin 70 and 80 to some extent, isn't a very good diet for human beings."
Justice Burger said, "especially when they get beyond 40, as most of us are now. Five of the nine justices are older than 70.

Similar ideas for a new interme diate court have been discussed since the case load problem was widely recognized a decade ago. But his address to the lawyers marked the first time that Justice Burger has put his influence behind a specific proposal.

We've been encouraged up to now by what we've been hearing from the Laotians and, to a lesser extent, from the Vietnamese. We don't want to lose this headway. It's a delicate situation." Laotian officials termed the lat-

One of the main goals of the ne-gotiations with the Laotians is to win permission for U.S. recovery experts to accompany Laotian officials on visits to several hundred sites where U.S. planes are known to have crashed during the war. About a fourth of the Americans still unaccounted for in Southeast Asia were lost in Laos.

William P. Clark, President Ronald Reagan's assistant for national security affairs, said recently that the administration was "resolutely opposed" to private across-the-border forays.

"Such actions," he said, "interfere with and damage legitimate efforts on a number of fronts. Our experience has been that such private initiatives operate with faulty or fabricated intelligence and lack even marginally adequate opera-tional capabilities."

The almost exclusive public focus on the missile question dur-ing the recent visit to West Germany by the Soviet foreign minister, Andrei A. Gromyko, has been somewhat misleading

The extraordinary thing was that Mr. Gromyko could be in West Germany in the midst of an election campaign without arousing controversy and that his visit came at the initiative of the incombent Christian Democratic government of Chancellor Helmut Kohl.

From Moscow's point of view, this reflected a qualitative change in West Germany. The essence of the Soviet effort to exploit this change was revealed by Mr. Gro-myko during his Jan. 18 press con-

U.K. Debate Revives on U.S. Missile Control

Public Unease Puts Pressure on Thatcher for a British Launch Role

By Peter Osnos

Washbreton Past Service LONDON - The extent of Britain's control over the use of U.S. cruise missiles to be based here has emerged as a major issue in the country's nuclear debate, with Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher inder pressure to insist on a direct British role if the missiles are ever launched.

Politicians from all parties, including Mrs. Thatcher's Conservatives, have expressed concern, as one Tory put it last week, that missiles based on British soil will not be under "sovereign British control." Reaganomics: After two years of sunny predictions and gloomy results, accented by cheerful supply-side nostrums, the term has become an embarrassment. Now the Reagan team is unfolding a new economic strategy, one that is sober, intelligent and consistent. But by expecting so bitle, the strategy risks returning even less. Bold steps, not a conserva-tive shuffle, are now needed to lead the world economy ont of stagnation.

The president's own Economic Report to Congress still clings to rationalizations and dreams: "A shortsighted view," be says, "was destroying our prospects for long-term pros-perity. . . . The full effect of [my] changes in government policy will take time to develop." But the accompanying report of Martin Feld-stein, the president's chief economic adviser, is more forthright. Without directly repudiating his boss's performance, it stresses government's poor economic record in recent years and offers only limited goals for the future.

Tight credit, says Feldstein, has brought down inflation, but it bas also cut deeply into employment. And the celebrated Reagan tax cuts will hold future growth hostage: Unless spending is cut drastically before the late 1980s, be writes, the ballooning federal deficits will absorb every penny of private saving.

The Federal Reserve, be argues, must steer a narrow course between the Scylla of re-inflation and the Charybdis of stagnation. His highest fiscal priority is cutting spending, to reduce the "structural" deficit to manageable proportion. Firmness, he implies, would allow 1.4 percent growth in 1983 and, with great luck, 4 percent annually thereafter.

Sober realism certainly beats the free-lunch frenzy of yesteryear. But settling for such low expectations creates its own perils. If unemployment hovers near 10 percent through 1984 the worldwide clamor for protectionism in trade may be irresistible. Protectionism might mean a few jobs for American auto workers, but it would surely depress the living standards of bundreds of millions of consumers and workers, in the United States and abroad.

Even if Reagan could persuade America and its trade partners to stay the course, the social costs would be enormous. Such persis-tent unemployment can scar this generation

Embassy in Tehran Now Iran has agreed to pay $26 million in compensation for the em-bassy compound — long described as "the oest of spies" by militants.

The payment, of symbolic value, is the latest in a series of conciliatory gestures by Tehran designed to facili-tate an eventual normalization of re-lations with Washington.

The marathon dispute over interest rates on Iran's assets, frozen in the United States for nearly 14 months, is being settled and American com-panies that sustained losses during the Islamic revolution are receiving compensation. Preliminary talks have also started in London on a settlement with American banks whose Iranian affiliates or partners were nationalized in 1980.

More important, State Department officials have for the first time been allowed to attend meetings of the joint commission set up by the two sides in the Hague to supervise the implementation of the agreement that led to the bostage release. Both governments seem interested in maintaining and upgrading the contact, a move which, even a year ago, could have stirred a storm in Tehran.

The republic's current strongman, Hashemi Rafsanjani, the Islamic Parhiament's speaker, recently devoted a large part of his Friday mosque sermon to the future of relations with the United States.

Disregarding the routine rhetorical broadsides against "the grand Sa-tan," Mr. Rafsanjani, in fact extended a hand of reconciliation toward Washington. He referred to the growing U.S. military presence in the Gulf but did not call for its withdrawal. Instead, he said the Islamic republic would accept Washington's "oil and other interests" in the region provided U.S. leaders behaved as "buman beings." Going even further, he said Iran could have trade and "other normal relations" with Washington.

In other words, the mullahs are calling on the United States to accept their domination in Iran and help them in the war against Iraq in exchange for a gradual restoration of

The message is almost the same one the mullahs tried to send to the United States at the start of their revolution more than four years ago. President Carter failed to get the right signals and supported noncleripoliticians who were in the limelight but lacked a genuine constituency in the country.

The seizure of the embassy was, in a sense, a means by which the mul-lahs sought to show Washington that they were the bosses in revolutionary Iran and not the politicians.

The new positions in Iran's foreign policy reflect domestic developments n the country. The government has been modifying some of its radical economic policies and offering the middle classes some individual freedom in exchange for political submission and exonomic collaboration.

The oew budget and a recently enacted labor code are both designed to liberalize the economy.

Trade between Iran and the United States has also been improving Last year Iran bought an estimated $1.1 billion worth of food, industrial equipment and pharmaceuticals from the United States and sold an undisclosed quantity of crude oil at "very attractive prices." And a larger number of business deals are being arranged, according to Tehran sources.
The West's attitude toward the Iranian mullahs has not been uniform France has openly sided with Iraq and is now considered in Tehran as Baghdad's second most important protector after the Soviet Union, Janan has more than doubled its direct oil purchases from Iran, while Italy almost regained its original share of the Iranian market.

Washington, however, by refusing to take Iraq's side, has facilitated the task of those in Iran who see the United States as a potential partner.

Moscow's resumption of extensive arms shipments to Iraq and its continuing quarrel with Tehran over Afghanistan have also improved the prospect of improved relations with the United States.

According to a senior Western diplomat, the West is pursuing three objectives in tran. It is, they say, seek-ing to diminish the likelihood of the mullahs aligning themselves with Moscow, to stop any further downgrading of Iranian relations with the West and to revive those links that "still have some life left in them."

He said the West has had a "fairly satisfactory" record in all three areas during the past 14 months. Western diplomats in Tehran have been working hard to persuade the mullahs that the Afghan situation deserves closer attention. "We want the muliahs to ask themselves the question: which power can start at breakfast and be in Tehran in time for unch?" " said a Western diplomat. Iran's increasingly close ties with Turkey and Pakistan, its allies in the Central Treaty Organization until four years ago, must be seen as important for better relations between the Islamic republic and the West. Turkey, a strong U.S. ally, could, when the time comes, lend a hand in "breadening the dialogue" between Tehran and Washington. "The mullahs want to repair their relations with the United States," cays an Iranian husinessman with links to the ruling clerics. "The only problem is to find a way for them to do so without losing face."

WASHINGTON — The recent record of the Middle East suggests that things have a way of blowing apart just when the necessary elements for accommodation appear to have been falling into place. Right now may be just such a moment, judging from talks with knowledgeable Western authorities who have been remarkably prescient

in the past.

These analysis are even ready to identify the prime candidate for the spoiler's role: Ariel Sharon. Rough and ever-ready for military solutions to any and all Israeli security problems, the Israeli defense minister is oot given to subtlety — his longing to invade Lebanon was advertised well in advance of the action. Right now, at least some experts believe, be may well be telegraphing another punch: an Israeli military sweep through Lebanon's Bekaa valley, designed to drive out the Syrian occupiers who provide the main means of support for the 8,000-plus. lessly irrational even by Sharon's standards, hear out the argument. The United States has a clear policy; it builds logically on Camp David's proposal to begin with a five-year period of "full autonomy" for the West Bank and Gaza Strip. The Reagan plan advances only in one respect; while foreclosing no ultimate solu-tion, it states a U.S. preference for some sort of federation between the West Bank and Jordan.

President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt was in Washington recently glowing with optimism that all the Arab "moderates" (he includes among them PLO Chairman Yasir Arafat) are deep-down in favor of the "Reagan initiative." Mubarak be-lieves the PLO and Jordan are on the edge of meeting its key conditions — public recognition of Israel's right to exist and acceptance of the United Nations resolutions underpinning the argues, is some reassurance that there is, so to say, water in the pool. That means some confidence that the United States, whose influence in any further "autonomy" negotiations would be crucial, is able and willing to exercise restraint on Israel. The Arab litmus test of choice is a demonstration that the United States can bring about the withdrawal of Israel Bot the Begin government says it wants no part of the Reagan plan.

What better way, then, to scuttle it than by digging in on the issue of withdrawing from Lebanon? In a matter of not too many months, the United States could be too mcapacitated by the political engencies of the developing 1984 presidential campaign for the judicious practice of Middle East diplomacy. El Salvador's Future

The military news in El Salvador is the guerrillas' capture and holding for two days of Ber-lin, population 35,000, a city in an interior province remote from their strongholds oear the Honduran border. Most American observers have reacted cautiously, aware perhaps of the exaggerated response to the communists' Tet offensive in Vietnam. Still, Berlin was a serious embarrassment to the government. The rebels, relying on ambushes, sabotage and intimidation, do not seem to be near a conntrywide military victory. Nor is there evidence that they have a mass following. But their pressure is constant and perhaps growing, and neither in San Salvador nor in Washington are the authorities certain what to do. Some of the Salvadoran government's problems are familiar: Nicaragua cootinues to augment the guerrillas locally obtained arms. The Reagan administration has not gotten from Congress all the military aid it has sought. Other problems arise within El Salvador.

The Salvadoran armed forces had a year, 1982, to use their new U.S. aid and training to turn the corner, and did not. They have been slow to adopt the aggressive, small-unit patrols their U.S. advisers feel are best suited to routing guerrillas. The Americans favor reform, but oow say the armed forces have been "distracted" by politics (land reform) and political infighting. Others note that Salvadoran commanders, uncertain of their troops, have preferred the safer tactic of large-unit sweeps, and that the government has been spread thin by having to defend economic targets.

Some officers have political associations on the feudal right. One of them, much admired by the Americans for his military record, Colonel Sigfredo Ochoa Perez, last month challenged the reform-minded chief of staff in what Georgetown University's Robert Leiken aptly calls an episode pitting "the Americans' darling against their right-hand man,"

There is a sense of a new turning point. The Americans nervously ask for "a more dynamic approach" by the Salvadorans and the transfer of American advisers from training to brigadelevel operations. Mr. Leiken suggests that anti-communist military groups in El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and the Nicaraguan opposition may join and launch their own combined regional offensive. No doubt there is room for military improvement. But steps that give greater sway to the military foes of domestic reform, and that threaten to bring outsiders more directly into the struggle, are self-defeating. A time of frustration is the right moment to renew a search for a political solution on the middle ground.

Barbie's Arrest

This affair is likely to open a Pandora's box of acts of collaboration with the Nazis that will overshadow the affair of Maurice Papon a former French budget minister charged with crimes against humanity during World War II]. Barbie's lawyers will certainly stress this theme in court. [We hope] that this argument, if it breaks, will not deter the French government and other European governments from increasing their pressure on Argentina, Chile and other South American states to follow Bolivia and extradite Nazi criminals living under their protection.

— The Ha'aretz (Tel Aviv).

No one except perhaps a few petrified Nazis still boled up somewhere in South America will weep tears for Kleus Barbie. Some may feel in their hearts that it is hard to hound even wicked old men for ever. But the French authorities have been vainly seeking the extradition of Barbie from Bolivia for many years and the delay has oot been of their making. Besides which, there remain today in Lyons many victims, or relations of victims, of Barbie's alleged barbarities who have a right to see justice done as it would be in commonplace criminal cases.

It is oot unnatural that politicians should wish to exhume Nazi relics such as Barbie, nor that they should wish to draw conclusions for the future. Unfortunately many of these conclusions are mundane or mendacious. In West Germany, the left has used the 50th anniversary of Hitler's coming to power to equate fas-cism with modern capitalism, merely because Hitler secured the support of some industrial-

It is right that we should remember. But the hope here would seem to be to shock and almost to suggest to children that we may face an imminent repitition of such events in our own society. There is a circus of propaganda in which the actual Barbie, incarcerated in the very prison where once be imprisoned Frenchmen, becomes quite irrelevant.

1908: Taft's Campaign

WASHINGTON — The sensational backing regarding the intentions of President Theodore Roosevelt affecting the participation of Mr. Hitchcock, the assistant postmaster general, in the work to influence the election of delegates for Mr. Taft today reached the stage where something definite can be known. It is said that Mr. Hitchcock has tendered his resignation and will become the active manager for Mr. Taft in the South. The Florida convention resulted in the bolting from the convention of those delegates instructed for Mr. Taft. Not the least interesting insinuation is that President Roosevelt had to dragoon the federal office holders in Florida before they would get on the Taft campaign train.

GENEVA - Faced with the League of Nations' determination to condemn Japan for violation of international treaties, the Japanese delegation made an important concession, rendering possible resumption of efforts to settle the Manchurian dispute. In this event, the league's condemnation of Japan, which seemed imminent after the Committee of 19's rejection of the Japanese reconciliation pro-posals last Saturday, would be avoided. Terms of Tokyo's "last effort toward conciliation" were communicated by Mr. Matsuoka, Japan's delegate, when he conferred with Dr. Eduard Benês, the Czechoslovakian reporter of the Committee of 19, and Captain Anthony

In S. Africa, Factions Live by Different Clocks By Anthony Lewis

TAPE TOWN - Jonathan Swift might bave sent Gulliver to such a place; a country where people exist in the same space but perceive different realities and live by different clocks. That is South Africa.

The gulf between white and black in South Africa is hardly new, but there is a paradox that makes it even more dramatic today. The government talks about reform, about ameliorating change in race relations - and the visitor can see that there is change. Yet many blacks find the change so their alienation deepens.

For the whites, the big political subject now is the package of constitutional reforms being pushed by the prime minister, P.W. Botha. The present all-white parliament will be replaced by one of three chambers: white, colored and Indian. Though the whites will remain dominant and select a powerful president, reform-minded members of the governing National Party see the changes as great step away from all-white politics. "Historis the word they use.

But blacks see the constitutional package as a device to co-opt the colored and Indian communities in order to keep the African majority of the population down. The so-called reforms, they say. continuing to deny the vote to all blacks, really entrench apartheid. A substantial number of coloreds share this view and are protesting the colored Labor Party's decision to try the new system.

Among whites, again, there is much ado about Bothe's announcement, just made to parliament, that a cabinet committee will study "problems" of blacks in urban areas. People in the inner circles of the National Party say the government will talk with real black leaders this time, and talk about some form of political rights.

But to blacks the cabinet committee is just another avoidance tactic. The reality they perceive is continuing repression of black political yearnings: the silencing of critical political voices, the harassment of black union leaders, the torture and death of people detained by the security police. As an outsider, visiting South Africa for the first time in two years, I see undeniable evidence of change. But it is change in attitudes rather than, so far, in the distribution of political power.

An example full of ironies is a tour by a cricket team of West Indians - all black. Whites, delighted at sabotaging the international sports boycott of South Africa, have been cheering the visitors. Die Burger, a conservative Afrikaans paper, had a large color picture of an exultant West Indian player on page one when the visitors won in Cane Town. There were outraged comments when Prime Minister Malcolm Fraser of Australia said the West Indian wicket-keeper, David Murray, could oot go there to join his white wife - though interracial marriage is against the law in South Africa.

In fact, some marriages between whites and co-loreds or Indians are now unofficially tolerated. though the law remains as a weapon for use when desired. I sense a general easing of the rigidities of racism, in the culture if not the law. Conscience seems to be nibbling away a bit. Most crucially, there are dissident voices in the Afrikaner community: academics, writers, a few churchmen.

The question is whether, and when, any of the felt movement may lead to a shift in political power: a real willingness to let blacks participate in 2 system. Should one believe the hints that it is than the change is coming? Is it true, as insiders say, if 2 the government's need to placate conservatives?

plains its public reassertions of the principles in humatic to an outsider — that blacks will find the rights in distant "homelands" that millions

Americans, brought up in the faith that peace :: ... change works, would tend to find some hope m planned inclusion of coloreds and Indians in its liament, however jerry-built the tricameral strings ture looks. If they come in, Botha will have to their politicians some tangible benefits: school housing, whatever. May he not get used to thir ing about nonwhite constituencies?

The trouble with that American liberal mode thought is that it does not fit the experience south African blacks. After years of political control basement they no longer believe in promises are progress. They know they cannot challenge with progress. They know they cannot challenge with they look. progress. They know they cannot change on power now, or for years to come, But they look of a distant future and believe it will be them. The are on a different clock.

Power is hard to share. Dr. Allan Boesak, a dored Dutch Reformed Church minister who is not one of the most articulate critics of the government, was speaking to a white university and a student asked what he would do if he with the minister. Central Europe Cannot Be Swept Into Archives

BUDAPEST — For West Europeans and North Americans, East-Central and Eastern Europe seem marginal, on the edge of the map. Beyond the Iron Curtain lie the remote countries of which we know bitle. Most Western governments prefer it that way, because to know is

East-Central Europe is to worry. If only these actually were marginal and inconsequential countries. It is possible to discount the problems of Montenegro, Transylvania, Ru-thenia, the Basques, the Corsicans, the Northern Irish, not because they are harmless — quite the contrary — but because there is oothing sensible to be done about them. Such probancient quarrels of infinite complication and tedium.

But the problem of Hungary, Czechoslovakia and Poland cannot be forgotten, either by the West or by the Soviet Union. These countries are intellectually, culturally and politi-cally central to Europe itself, the whole of Europe, which remains, like it or not, the most creative and powerful social and economic aggregate contemporary in the world. It is where the two present-day superpowers are necessarily committed, and where they confront one another. It is perhaps out too much to say that it is where the future of us all will be settled

Heating Oil, Gasoline Futures Indicate Losses May Lie Ahead

TEW YORK - Nowhere is the disarray in the global petroleum market more visible than in the heating oil and gasoline futures trading pits of the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Not only have the futures prices reflected the sharp drop in oil prices this winter, but last week they also showed that unless the oil refiners take measures to high the rising surpluses of fuel, their operating losses will be even greater than they have been.

will be even greater than they have been.

Last Friday one major refiner, Exxum, decided to take action and raised its wholesale price of heating oil by 2 cents a gallon, to 81.5 cents, despite the fact that all hig integrated oil companies have been benefiting from the recent price cutting among the contentious members of OPEC as well as among suppliers who do not belong to the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

The price increase seemed an anomaly but traders said, in effect, that Exxon had decided to recover its earlier high crude oil costs regardless of the risk of driving approximate.

the risk of driving away customers. Exxon's move caused the spot March futures to rally 1.30, to 75.65 cents, leaving the contract showing a gain of 0.44 cent for the week. But the near March futures

Nov. 1, the nominal start of the cases and a season.

"Obviously, the uncommonly—mild winter, the recession, consumer conservation and an increase in non-OPEC oil supplies all contributed to the decline in cash and futures prices this season," said Steven Errera, president of Energy Futures Inc.

"But the same factors have caused the big-oil companies to sustain luge refinery operating losses, which they may not want to let continue much longer," he said.

In fact. Mr. Errera pointed out, "It is more profitable today for many

In fact, Mr. Errera pointed out, "It is more profitable today for many refiners to buy heating oil and pasoline on the open market for resale to their customers than to buy crude oil and refine it."

The reason: The market prices of oil products have fallen to levels that make refining uneconomical in this country. As a rule of thumb, a 42-gallon barrel of crude will yield the following products: 44 percent gasoline, 21 percent in No. 2 grade distillate heating oil, 11 percent in No. 6 and other heavy industrial heating oils, 5 percent in jet fuel, 3 percent in percentencial feed stocks, 2 percent in asphalt and the remainder in other products. Although each refiner has a different mix, the bulk of the refined products — heating oils and gasoline — must be profitable to offset the cost of the raw petroleum and any losses that may be incorred in selling

According to Mr. Errera's calculations, which were supported by several other oil specialists last week, a $30 barrel of crude is worth less today than the value of all the products extracted from it. Mr. Errera

"If the average mid-America refiner gets crude at $28 or $28.50 a barrel, it would have to sell heating oils today at between $0 and $2 cents a gallon and gasoline at $1 to $3 cents in order to break even, Last Friday, the cash price for No. 2 hearing oil in New York harbor was 78 cents, with leaded regular grade gasoline at 30 cents. However, cash prices for both fuels have been selling at discounts, which may deepen if retailers can not dispose of hearing oil to make room for the gasolines they have ordered for the motoring season."

With the winter two thirds over and the motoring season still a few months away, refiners are not getting anywhere near these break-even

Upward Movement Expected

"Crude would have to be priced at $25 a barrel for most refiners to show profits on today's product mix," he said. "Thus, we may yet see prices move up, surplus supplies or not, until the cheaper wellhead crude prices refusers are now paying move through the industry's pipelines."

Joel Faber, president of a energy futures brokerage house bearing his

"The oil futures market has been sagging in recent weeks because buyers are waiting for all the cheaper prices they read about to work through the industry's product mixes. How much further will crude prices drop? It depends on each refiner's product mix, competitive factors, how friendly the refiners want to remain with their crude oil suppliers and other imponderables"

While futures traders wait, they have been increasingly engaging in spreading operations, he said. The most popular spread today is to buy May heating oil and sell May gasoline, because many think the price spread in favor of leaded gasoline is too wide, despite the seasonal fac-

Last Friday, May heating oil futures closed at 72.89 ccms a gallon and May leaded gasoline at 79.72 ccmts.

Because the gasoline pricing situation has been far less clear than that of heating oil in recent weeks, trading in gasoline futures has soared. Last month, for example, the open interest in leaded gasoline futures on the New York Mercantile Exchange was 6,782 contracts, up more than fourfold from January 1982, while the volume jumped a similar amount, to

New York Insurance Exchange: A Reinsurance 'Farmer's Market'

By Leonard Sloane

New York Times Service NEW YORK — One day late last year, Robert L. Sanford, president of Sargent Wobber & Co., a property and casualty insurance broker, walked to the floor of the New York Insurance Exchange with a mission: A Dutch company wanted him to obtain builder's risk reinsurance on two submarines that were under construction. He placed $18 million worth of the insurance with three underwriters on the exchange - a small percentage of the $720-million total, but an important part of the package.

"The exchange is a market where the ease of trading is at the uppermost," Mr. Sanford said.

A centralized insurance market, where many underwriters stand ready to accept risks, was not available in the United States before March 31, 1980, when the exchange has done so well. Some major U.S. and eign-owned underwriters believe that the exchange has not proved necessary, that underwriters and brokers can deal adequately with one another at their offices and by telephone. Nevertheless, the New York exchange has established itself as a presence in the worldwide business of reinsuring risks.

There is no one system that meets every need," said Donald E. Reutershan, president of the exchange.
"Different market approaches are effective. But a lot of business had gone abroad because of the lack of an exchange, and now the exchange will serve a lot more

The New York Insurance Exchange, which was responsible for about $150 million worth of premium volume in 1982, is the largest of three insurance exchanges in the United States. After Exchange Control Move

JOHANNESBURG (Combined Dispatches) — Shares on the Johannesburg Stock Exchange fell about 10 percent across the board in early trading Monday but later recovered on the first day of trading after the government abolished exchange controls on the rand for nonresidents,

They ascribed the strong demand to bargain hunting in anticipation of improved earnings resulting from the authorities' move, which brought the commercial rand down to about 88 U.S. cents from 93 previously. Until last week, conresidents had to trade shares and other assets through the financial rand, worth about 77 U.S. cents or about 17 percent less than the commercial rand's value of 93 cents. The two-tiered system attracted foreign investors, who purchased shares at the lower ate while receiving dividends at the higher rate. This was a premium the South African government paid foreigners for taking the political risk of investing in South Africa.

Making the announcement Saturday, Finance Minister Owen P.F. Horwood said that the abolition of controls, introduced in 1961 after the Sharpeville riots triggered a flow of capital from the country, was a 'great expression of faith' in the economy.

Digital Plans U.K. Research Unit

LONDON (IHT) — Digital Equipment said Monday that it will set up a research unit in Reading. England, at a cost of about £7 million ($10.6)

The unit will focus on developing software for office automation and could create 250 to 300 jobs over the next five years or so, the company

U.K. Phone Market to Be Opened

LONDON (Reuters) — Kenneth Baker, the information technology minister, said Monday he plans further competition in the telecommunications market. He told Parliament that customers will be free to buy a first telephone from any supplier by the end of next year and the maintenance of new call routing apparatus will be open to approved companies He accepted that when made private. BT should limit certain call and service charges to below the increase in retail prices for some time.

Pirelli Sees No Profit This Year

MILAN (Reuters) - Pirelli expects no profit in the current fiscal year, ending April 30, the managing director, Jacopo Vittorelli, said Monday.

Pirelli had net profit of 25.6 billion lire ($17.9 million) last year.

Mr. Vittorelli said Pirelli experts to break even this year. He gave no consolidated figures for the period, but said Pirelli's debt rose to about 100 billion lire by the end of October, from 10 billion in July, and could rise more in the second half.

Nigeria Oʻil Output Falls Sharply

LAGOS (Reuters) — Nigeria's oil production fell to just over 800,000 barrels a day in January, compared with 1.2 million barrels in December, and February's average is not likely to be much more than 600,000 barrels, industry sources said Monday.

But despite the intense pressure such low figures put on its economy, there are no signs that Nigeria is likely to break OPEC rules by cutting rices unilaterally, the sources said. More than 90 percent of Nigeria's hard currency income is from oil.

with American life, the newlyweds moved to the Riviera in 1921 and were generally credited with originating the summer season there.

Neither Hemingway nor Fitzger-ald was easy to like, though the Murphys were fond of them both. Hemingway liked "tough-guy" talk and is remembered by Honoria as shadow-boxing in their living room. He also boasted of beating the poet Wallace Stevens in a fist fight, neglecting to mention that Stevens was 20 years older, overweight and knew nothing of fighting. (On the evidence, Hemingway was not much bener in this last respect, and his reputation as a boxer is undeserved.) When Hem-ingway's "A Moveable Feast" came out with some rather unkindremarks about the Murphys - as

He said that he stopped painting because there were enough second rate painters in the world, but Honoria is inclined to attribute his giving it up to the despair that he felt at the death of his sons. It was

When the Murphys went back to the United States in the 1930s. Gerald observed that "All Americans seem such immature human beings," but this was only because he was looking at them through what he called "the deceptive light of Europe." Of Mark Cross, the business his father started and he inherited, Gerald said that it was "a monument to the nonessential." Here again, he was not himself, for he was a man who loved nonessential things, like villas, yachts, gour-met food and dressing up in improbable costumes.

After reading "Sara and Ger-ald," one feels an almost irresisti-ble temptation to say "We will oev-er see their like again." Whether it's true or not, perhaps we ought to resist this temptation and try to believe that every age has its own particular heroes and heroines who will find a way to express the gentus of the time.

CHESS

By Robert Byrne

PLAYING an opening by rote may be good enough if you can keep the rote right. The trouble is that there are many routine paths that diverge only slightly, but very significantly, from each other, and disaster awaits if you don't zag when the opposent zigs.

That seems to be what happened in the game between Lev Alburt, a New York grandmaster, and Vladimir Kovacevic, a Yugoslav grand-master, in the 10th round of the Olympiad in Lucerne, Switzerland. Both followed the trunk of the Ca-talan Opening and proceeded branch for branch until Alburt went the way of a less-used twig and Kovacevic fell out of the tree. One point of the 5 . . . B-N5ch variation in the Catalan accepted is that 6 N-B3?!, P-QN4; 7 N-K5, N-Q4 marks White's gambit as dubious. The same is true after 6 QN-Q2?!, P-B3, followed by 7 . . . P-QN4.

After the correct 6 B-Q2, simplification with 6 . . . BxBch; 7 QxB is oot unreasonable, but then Black should not be lured into 7 . . . P. QN4?!, 8 Q-N5, O-O; 9 QxP, B-R3; 10 Q-R4, Q-Q2; 11 Q-R3 with the superior pawn structure for White. Kovacevic's 6 . . B-K2 was the recommended move, with the subtle idea that the white QB at Q2 will prove to be awkwardly

The system with 8 . . . B-B3 used by the Yugoslav is based oo the strategy of restraining the white pawn center with the black minor pieces. So far, so good.

Against the more heavily traf-licked twig, 9 N-B3, the reply 9 . . N-K5 is the best, but in this game, Kovacevic seems to have overlooked that Alburt did not play 9 N-B3. After the offshoot, 9 O-O. Black should have zagged with 9 . . . B-Q4; 10 Q-B2, N-B3, when it is difficult to advance the while center aggressively. But Kovacevic went the wrong rote with 9 . . . N-K5?! and after 10 B-B4!, the black king knight was dangling precariously.

After 10 ... N-Q2; 11 N-K5, B-Q4; 12 Q-B2, there was no use in bracing Black's frail outpost with 12 . . . P-KB4? since 13 P-B3, N-Q3; 14 P-K4, B-QB3; 15 NxB, PxN; 16 QxP wins a pawn and obtains great positional advantage.

Position after 24 ... Q-K2

Moreover, 12 . . . NxN; 13 PxN, N-B4; 14 R-Q1, Q-B1; 15 BxB, PxB; 16 RxP also costs Black B

In resorting to 12 . . P-KN4, Kovacevic reconciled himself to the loss of a pawn, but he perhaps hoped to create some partly com-pensating weakness in the white king position. However, Alburt would not concede him that — after 13 BxN, PxB; 14 BxB, PxB; 15 Q-KB5!, White could not he prevented from taking the foremost KBP with his queen.

Kovacevic should have found time to get his king out of the center, but oot 19 O-O-O?; 20 NaP!, B-O3; 21 Q-B3, BxP; 22 BPxB, QxN; 23 QxPch. Also, after. 19 P-B3; 20 P-K3, he had to refram from 20 O-O-O?; 21 N-N5!, B-Q3 (21 P-N3?; 22 RxPch! or 21 P-QR3?; 22 N-R7mate); 22 NxBch, QxN; 23 OxPch.

After 24 Q-R6, it is understandable that Kovacevic did not care to lose a second pawn by 24. O-O-O; 25 P-B3, R-N2; 26 QxP. However, his blunder, 24. QxK2?, let Alburt score with 25 RxBP? Since 26 R-K6 was now threatened and 25 PxR; 26 QxPch, Q-Q2; 27 QxRch puts White three pawns ahead. Kovacevic gave up.

PEBBLE BEACH, California — Tom Kite, staggering through the final holes, won the 42d Bing Cros-by National golf tournament Sun-

Following his course-record 62 of Saturday, Kite almost coughed up a six-stroke lead while battling rain, wind, cold and the 6,799 water-logged yards of Pebble Beach Golf Links, Rex Caldwell and Bob Gilder, each poised to challenge Kite and the course, had their hopes dashed by double-bogeys.

Kite, the most consistent scorer in golf the last two years, managed to win the $58,500 first prize while shooting a one-over-par 73. on a cart path and bounced over a fence and out of bounds. The ensuing double-bogey dropped him to 72/279 and into a tie for fourth with Danny Edwards. Kite had a two-shot edge as he began his final round in a misty drizzle. But Caldwell had back-toback birdies on the opening two holes, and when Kite bogeyed No. 1 by missing a 2½ font putt, Caldwell took the lead.

Pumped up, Caldwell tried to cut the corner on the 388-yard dogleg par-4 third. His drive ("I pull-hooked it") caught a tree and re-bounded across a ditch into heavy undergrowth at the base of a pine. "When I saw ball," he said, "I was thinking. and that's the way to play him, too. I just needed some people to tell me over and over and bang it into Lendi's final forehand sailed long, could play it from the backcourt MeEnroe rushed the oet 106 times, a significantly high total, and the extent of his effectiveness was reflected in the oumber of points won with that tactic. lo the first set, with Lendl saving three break points and breaking McEn-roe in the fifth game, McEnroe won only 14 of 32 points at the oct. But over the last three sets he won 48 of the 74 points at the net.

"I think his serve was better than mine, and that was the difference," said Lendl, admittedly discouraged after having squandered a 3-1 lead in the second set tie breaker. The tie breaker stripped some of the confidence from Lendi, who had broken MeEnroe's serve at 5-3, helped by two double-faults. One particular point to the tie breaker, at 3-all, underscored McEnroe's commitment and seemed to shift the momentum of the match.

Lendi served and appeared to have won the point with a bounce smash. But McEnroe, 10 feet behind the baseline, guessed correctly, on the direction of the shot, racedcross-court and oot only reached the ball but hit an aggressive forehand down the line. Lendl covered the shot with a forehand crosscourt, and it appeared he now had won the point a second time.

But MeEnroe, scrambling, anticipated the forehand, pushed a backhand winner down the line and then pumped bis arms furiously, a la Jimmy Connors.

"Every night we have seen the unemployed line up and march across the television screen, and l certainly would not make light of the people who are unemployed. . . But why is it that 10.8 percent is oews, but 89.2 percent of Americans who are employed and enjoy the highest standard of living is Larry posed a good question. Why aren't the oews programs covering the employed people instead of the unemployed? And how would they handle it, if they did? "This is Tom Brokaw in New York. The big news tonight is that 89.2 percent of all Americans who want jobs have them. Irving R. Levine reports on the plight of one of these men in Scarsdale, New

NEW YORK - "The rumors? They're all true," he once told an interviewer on a set in Ireland, "Booze, broads, all true. Make up some more if you

The tequila is over on the sideboard. Every oow and then for the next two hours, a movie tough guy will stretch himself up from the sofa and amhle toward a fifth of Cuervo Especial. It is full of bored insolence, this walk. It is as languid as a boa's glide. It is a kind of actor's signature, though the actor himself would claim it comes merely from trying to stand up and go in a straight

Robert Mitchum is sitting in Pall Mall smoke and a soft green turtleneck in a snite at the Waldorf. On the sofa beside him are rumpled newspapers. In front of him are two tube lighters and a black ashtray with a dozen squashed butts in it. "I like the work," he says of his 40 years in the business. "I just don't like talking about it," he says dully through a smoker's liquid hack.

He had come east to talk up his new movie, "That Champion-ship Season." (He also stars as Pug Henry in "The Winds of Wars," the 18-hour TV series based on Herman Wouk's novel about World War II, which is running all this week in the United States.)

Mrs. Mitchum is out shopping for shoes. She has all the luck. Why did he ever let himself get talked into this? Why didn't he just stay home in Montecito?

He is 65 years old. The double chin is huge, and the gut is a full ripe melon, and somehow he's Hollywood-handsome anyway. The voice is rich and deep, marinated hy five decades' worth of rum and vodka and tequils. (All three are at the sideboard.] The hair, which you wouldn't call groomed, keeps winging down onto his temples. He wipes it back and it flops forward again. Maybe be forgot to pack a brush. Maybe he hasn't combed it since "Night of the Hunter," when he played, for director Charles Laughton, that cracked fraud of a preacher that some critics said was the most compelling study of evil in postwar U.S. cinema.

You can't see the famous sleepy Mitchum lids — they're hidden behind the atomic reactor tinted glasses. That's another don't-give-a-damn trademark: wearing dark glasses indoors. Mitchum, ever the myth-buster, claims his sleepy-lidded look comes from chronic insomnia and an old, double astigmatism from the days when he was a prizelighter. Whatever it comes from, the look used to drive bobby-soxers slightly frantic. Sinatra. coming across from Hoboken oo the ferry to play the Paramount 40 years ago, used to really drive them frantic, but Mitchum did okay, too. In a way, Mitchum was James Dean before James

Yes, he's the essential Hollywood "nonconformist"; yes, like Sinatra (one of his few longtime Hollywood friends), he has a knack for sullying himself in public; yes, he got husted for pot back when most of the Umted States thought pot was something you cook a Sunday roast in but it's a little more complicated than this. If this is the fahled "loner" who doesn't give a damn about the movie business, then why is he also known as the one who's almost never late on the set and invariably has his lines down cold as a mackerel? And if he's so loose, how come he can't sleep
